Corona Heights park has some of the best views in San Francisco, as well as vibrant spring wildflower displays of California poppy, footsteps of spring, mule's ears, and Johnny jump-up.

The prominent red rock outcrops are radially jointed. There is also an excellent example of a "slickenside," a smooth, polished surface between two masses of rock that is created by tectonic sliding. This slick vertical rock face can be seen from the steps of the park.

In the late 1800s, Corona Heights was quarried by the infamous Gray Brothers for brick-making materials. The park's steps, exposed rock faces and "crown" are the result of quarrying. Today, tennis courts, playing fields, and the Randall Museum occupy large quarried areas.

Enjoy your stay. Go Out and Play, and please take your trash with you. THIS SIGN WAS MADE FROM 100% SAVAGED MATERIALS.
